RAILWAY PROBLEM. President Finley, of the Southern Radway Company, who was one of the principal speakers at a banquet given Tuesday evening by the Br stol Va., board of trade, spake on the relation of transportation to development

Quoting from a Bristol newspaper the statement that "the history of the growth of this section has been the hisory of the growth of her railways," Mr. Finley pointed out that this region had been able, in the past, to increase his production far beyond the needs of its people because it had transportation fa-cilities which enabled its surplus products to be shipped to places where they were in demand, and that further devel-opment would be, in large measure, dendent on such an increase in carrying capacity as would enable the railways of that section to handle each successive in resse in the volume of traffic,

He referred to the fact that two years sgo the traffic of the United S ates had been such as to tax the capacity of the railways, and, with car shops, locomowhelmed with orders it had been impossible to increase railway facilities as rapidly as the volume of traffic had been increasing.

Mr. Finley referred to the interest of the the railways in the development of the country and the interest of the people in giving to their railways the support of a strong and militant public opinion that would advocate policies favorable to railway development and that would not make the first sign of increasing railway uet income a signal for demands for in-creased charges and for the imposition of restrictive and destructive regulations. In these remarks the speaker said he was not opposing the regulation of railways by governmental authority within a proper field. A railway company, Mr. Finley said, maintains a public highway. It is a proper function of government to guarantee to all individuals, under similar circumstances and conditions, equal rights in the use of this highway. In conclusion Mr. Finley said: "The history of the civilized world demon-strates that, in all ages, those countries have been most prosperous in which the individual citizen has been given the greatest degree of liberty in the management of his own affairs consistent with the preservation of a like measure of liberty to all other individ-SNAKE STOLE THE WHISKY. Four grave and dignified members of the Bloomfield. Pa., bar are sponsors

They took along a lunch basket containing pickles, cheese, crackers and a three foot length bologus sausage. Incidently, there was in the naket a sarsaparilla bottle that somebody had thoughfully filled with whisky in acticipation of somebody else getting suske bitten. They hid their lunch basket and fished for several hours. When they returned to the basket the bologra and whisky were gone. On the way home Judge Scholl discovered a huge blacksnake stretched in the road, oblivious to the world. When killed it was noticed that it seemed great! disended and a post morten was held, revealing in the snake's stomach the bree-foot length of bolgons and the botle of whiskey.
